

Marie Keaveney Ph.D. obtained her doctorate in molecular and cellular biology from the National University of Ireland, Galway. She completed post-doctoral fellowships at the European Molecular Biology Lab in Heidelberg and at Harvard Medical School,. Following this she moved into the biotechnology/pharmaceutical area where she has more than 12 years of experience as an accomplished scientist and program manager. She worked for over 7 years in the drug discovery organization at Millennium Pharmaceuticals. She then transitioned to program management and joined Ironwood Pharmaceuticals in 2006. Following this she joined Archemix Corp. as a Senior Project Manager where she was responsible for managing a portfolio of internal and alliance aptamer therapeutic programs in discovery, preclinical and clinical stages of development. In her most recent role she served as Head of Discovery Program Management at Aileron Therapeutics with the responsibility for managing internal and alliance partner peptide therapeutic programs.